

THE GRYPHONS CHIME IN

The SCHL is approaching its 10th season, so I'd thought it'd be interesting to measure the success of all the original franchises. There are certainly different ways of doing this, so I compiled three rankings.

For sure, the WG points are the most relevant to determine how good or bad a team has been, so the first list is just the average number of points scored per year, rounded. I've also included the average WG finish, which correlates almost perfectly with the points ranking.

The second list is money won, but straight comparisons here are useless since, for example, the HB's first championship nine years ago obviously didn't earn as much as the Bullets' last year. To keep it fair, I've adjusted the list for "inflation" and other changes to the reward system. Essentially, take what everyone has won and apply that to today's standards (a pot of $3080 with the current breakdowns). This also applies to some awards that earn money now but didn't before, such as the PM. For the purposes of this list, old division titles are worth the same as silver.

The last list is simply the number of points from win/loss/tie records averaged out per year. Wins and losses are partly just fluke, so it's the least relevant measure of success.

Newer teams from the departure of the Barbours and expansion teams are not included as they haven't really been around long enough for this kind of comparison. Since it goes back to the first SCHL season (*which is 98-99, sorry Shrubs), and to keep the comparison clean, I've included the data of former owners of existing teams. That includes Goon Snipers for the Barracudas, Roaddogs for the Regime, and Road Runners for the Vanguard.

CELEBRATING 10 YEARS OF THE SCHL

Obviously, the higher up you are on each list, the better your team has been. It's no surprise to see the Kilts at the top of all three lists. Heartbreakers and Tycoons also make great showings here.
